26 films playing continuously on two monitors

Jef Cornelis is a Belgian director of a vast number of films and programs for the Flemish Belgian Radio Television network (BRT—now the VRT). From 1964 to 1996, he directed more than 100 films on a broad array of topics related to the areas of contemporary culture and art, Flemish landscape and architecture, literature and music. These films and programs are compelling to us today for their experimentation with the televisual format, technique and style, their choice of subject matter and in the way debate and conflict played out. Indeed, many are outrightly prescient.

Cornelis was motivated by a relentless curiosity for the medium of television and its communicative properties and formats combined with a profoundly inquiring mind. Fascinated by different forms of knowledge and social constructs and how they intersect with contemporary culture and society, he explored the televisual format to stage, frame or give free rein to their encounter in a critical and often provocative manner. His desire to foster debate, to render here and now the crux of an exchange, and to bring image and place together lead him to realize live films and programs using satellite links in the 1980s, such as in the series Icebreakers (Ijsbreker, 1983-84) and in the marathon six hours film The Longest Day (De langste dag, 1986).

In the last decade, his work has been increasingly presented and discussed in the context of contemporary art (ironically there is very little place for it in television today) in art academies and museum symposia notably Inside the White Tube: A Retrospective View on the Television Work of Jef Cornelis (ARGOS, 2016), In Focus: Jef Cornelis at the Liverpool Biennial (2014), Barely There, Part 1 at the Museum of Contemporary Art Detroit (2011) and Are You Ready for TV? at MACBA Museu d'art contemporani (2011, Barcelona).

PROGRAMME 2

1 film, running time: 6 hrs. 20 min.

The Longest Day, 1986 runs over 6 hours. On June 21, 1986, Cornelis used a helicopter and a mobile crew to film the opening of a series of exhibitions taking place in Ghent titled Initiateef 86 (joining it all together via satellite). Curators Jean-Hubert Martin, Gosse Oosterhof, Kasper König and Jan Hoet, and the participating artists talk freely. We are also taken around Chambres d'amis an innovative exhibition at the time curated by Jan Hoet in which international artists developed projects inside 50 private homes.

1. De langste dag (The Longest Day), 1986

Video, colour, 6 hrs 15 min. 48 sec.

Dutch, French, English, Italian; English subtitles

PROGRAMME 3

6 films, running time: 5 hrs. 30 min.

Cornelis's filmic commentaries on important large-scale international exhibitions such as Documenta 4 (1968) and 5 (1972), Sonsbeek 86, Munster Skulptur Projekt (1987) and the Paris Biennale (1985) reveal the politics and tensions that shape those events. Included is a round table on the state of the arts in Belgium led by Chris Dercon.

1. Documenta 4, 1968

16 mm transferred to video, B&W, 53 min. 19 sec.

Dutch, French, English, German; English subtitles

2. Documenta 5, 1972

Dutch, English, German, French, Italian and Spanish; English subtitles

PROGRAMME 4

4 films, running time: 4 hrs. 10 min.

Two television series initiated by Cornelis in which he experimented with format: Ijsbreker (Icebreaker) (1983-1984) that ran for 22 episodes and the controversial Container (1989) that was cancelled after 10 episodes. Their aim was to foster a free debate of ideas.

1. Ijsbreker 01: Panamarenko (Icebreaker 01: Panamarenko), 1983

Video, colour, 48 min. 48 sec.

Dutch; English subtitles

2. Ijsbreker 16: Lichamen – Toonbeelden (Icebreaker 16: The Body – Model Images), 1984
